ORDER CONSTRUING
MOTION TO DISMISS AS A MOTION TO DISMISS OR TRANSFER AND TRANSFERRING THE HABEAS
PETITION TO THE DISTRICT OF ARIZONA

This matter came before the Court on Monday, March 20, 2006, on Respondents' motion to dismiss for improper venue Petitioner's petition for a writ of habeas corpus. Having carefully considered the parties' papers and oral arguments, the Court construes Respondents' motion to dismiss as a motion to dismiss or transfer and ORDERS the transfer of the petition to the District of Arizona under 28 U.S.C. sections 1406(a) and 1631 for the reasons set forth below.

1. BACKGROUND

Petitioner is a citizen of Mexico who entered the United States (“U.S.”) as an immigrant in 1970. Pet. at 2:12-13. In 1989, Petitioner pled guilty to rape by force or fear in California state court, in Santa Cruz County. Id. at 3:7-8, 3:23-25. The events giving rise to the rape conviction occurred when Petitioner was nineteen years old and he served three

1 years and seven months in prison. Id. Prior to the removal proceedings, Petitioner lived with 2 his family in Watsonville, California (within the Northern District). Ex. B to Pet.

In 2004, the Department of Homeland Security (“D.H.S.”) instituted removal proceedings against Petitioner on the ground that he is an alien previously convicted of an aggravated felony within the meaning of 8 U.S.C. section 1101(a)(43)(A) & (F). Pet. at 3:9-12; Ex. N to Pet. In July 2004, an Immigration Judge (“I.J.”) in Eloy, Arizona ordered Petitioner’s removal from the U.S. Pet. at 5:9-14. Petitioner sought review of the I.J.’s order but the Board of Immigration Appeals dismissed the appeal. Id. at 5:15-16. An appeal of the removal order is currently before the Ninth Circuit, which has issued a stay of removal pending review of Petitioner’s appeal.¹ Id. at 5:18-19.

11 Since April 2004, Petitioner has been detained at the Eloy Detention Facility 12 (“E.D.F.”) (within the District of Arizona). Mot. at 1:27-28; Ex. B to Pet. In July 2004, 13 Petitioner submitted documentation to D.H.S. requesting his release or reasonable bond 14 under 8 U.S.C. section 1231(a)(6). Pet. at 6:24-25; Ex. B to Pet. The request was denied.
15 Pet. at 7:1-3.

16 On December 9, 2005, Petitioner filed a petition for writ of habeas corpus in this 17 Court, alleging that Respondents are unlawfully detaining him in violation of 8 U.S.C.
18 section 1231(a)(6) because they have interpreted that section as permitting indefinite 19 detention. Id. at 7:10-12. Petitioner asks this Court to assume jurisdiction of the matter and 20 order Respondents to release Petitioner from their custody under an order of supervision. Id.
21 at 10:3-6.

22 Respondents now move to dismiss the habeas petition for improper venue.
23 Respondents assert that under 28 U.S.C. section 2241(a) and the “district of confinement” 24 rule, the proper district is the District of Arizona because Petitioner is being detained at 25 E.D.F. Petitioner responds that the proper venue is the Northern District of California

²⁶ The REAL ID Act of 2005, enacted on May 11, 2005, vests circuit courts with ²⁷ subject matter jurisdiction over challenges to removal orders as the “exclusive means for ²⁸ judicial review of an order of removal entered or issued under any provision of this Act.” 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(5).

1 because 28 U.S.C. section 2241(a) does not contain a specific venue provision applicable to 2 this case and traditional venue considerations apply and militate in favor of this district.
3 Opp'n. at 1. Because neither party addressed the issue of transfer in their papers, this Court 4 issued a supplemental order on March 13, 2006, ordering the parties to be prepared to 5 address the issue during oral argument. The Court heard oral arguments on the motion to 6 dismiss and the issue of transfer on March 20, 2006.

8 II. LEGAL STANDARD

9 In 2004, the Supreme Court endorsed the “district of confinement” rule, stating that 10 “[t]he plain language of [28 U.S.C. section 2241(a)] confirms the general rule that for core 11 habeas petitions challenging present physical confinement, jurisdiction lies in only one 12 district: the district of confinement.” Padilla v. Rumsfeld, 542 U.S. 426, 443 (2004).
13 Padilla, however specifically concerned an enemy combatant, not an immigrant detainee. It 14 also did not explicitly overrule a 1973 Supreme Court case, Braden v. 30th Judicial Circuit Court of Kentucky, 410 U.S. 484 (1973), which held that traditional venue considerations 15 apply to habeas petitions. As one court has noted, “Supreme Court precedent [set forth in 16 Braden] establishes that traditional venue doctrines are fully applicable” to habeas petitions 17 brought pursuant to 28 U.S.C. section 2241. Henderson v. I.N.S., 157 F.3d 106, 127 (2d Cir.
18 1998). Traditional venue considerations include, but are not limited to, where (1) “the 19 material events took place,” (2) where the “records and witnesses pertinent to petitioner’s 20 claim are likely to be found,” and (3) whether the forum is convenient for the parties.
21 Braden, 410 U.S. at 493-94. Since the tension between Padilla and Braden has not been 22 resolved in immigrant detainee cases, this Court will apply both the “district of confinement” 23 rule and the traditional venue standard. As discussed below, the Court finds that under either 24 standard, venue is proper in the District of Arizona.

25 As to transfer, 28 U.S.C. section 1406(a) sets forth that “[t]he district court of a 26 district in which is filed a case laying venue in the wrong . . . district shall dismiss, or if it be 27 in the interest of justice, transfer such case to any district . . . in which it could have been

1 brought.” 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a). In addition, 28 U.S.C. section 1631 explains that 2 “[w]henever a civil action is filed . . . and th[e] court finds that there is a want of jurisdiction, 3 the court shall, if it is in the interest of justice, transfer such action . . . to any other such court 4 in which the action . . . could have been brought at the time it was filed or noticed” 28 5 U.S.C. § 1631. This Court determines that transfer is appropriate under both of these statutes 6 as provided below.

8 III. DISCUSSION

9 In this case, Petitioner named the Attorney General and the Secretary of D.H.S. rather 10 than his immediate custodian as the respondents. The law is currently unsettled as to the 11 proper respondent in a case such as this.² Since Petitioner’s immediate custodian is in 12 Arizona, but Petitioner prefers to have the petition heard in California, Petitioner named the 13 Attorney General and the Secretary of D.H.S. as respondents, and argues that traditional 14 venue considerations cut in favor of this district. This Court does not need to resolve the 15 issue of whether Petitioner has named the proper respondent, however, because the 16 government is not challenging Petitioner’s choice of respondent. Rather, it accepts for 17 18 ²Generally, a habeas petitioner challenging his physical custody should name his 19 “immediate custodian” as the respondent. Padilla, 542 U.S. at 435. However, it is unclear 20 whether the Attorney General or the immediate custodian is the “proper respondent to a 21 habeas petition filed by an alien detained pending deportation.” Id. at 436 n.8 (noting that 22 “lower courts have divided on this question” and citing six circuit cases including a Ninth 23 Circuit case that later was withdrawn: five of the cases holding that the Attorney General is 24 not the proper respondent; the Ninth Circuit case holding that the Attorney General is a 25 proper respondent).

26 In the prisoner context, courts are generally uniform in holding that the Attorney 27 General is not the proper respondent. See Vasquez v. Reno, 233 F.3d 688, 691 (1st Cir. 2000) 28 (noting that “a number of courts have specifically rejected the argument that a [prisoner]’s 29 proper custodian for habeas purposes is the Attorney General”). But, “the case law 30 concerning the identify of the proper respondent to habeas petitions brought by detained 31 aliens is much more sparse and far less coherent.” Id.

32 It may be that this question has been resolved by the REAL ID Act of 2005, which 33 names the Attorney General as the proper respondent to challenges to removal orders. 8 34 U.S.C. § 1252(b)(3)(A). The five cases (other than the Ninth Circuit case that since has been 35 withdrawn) that were cited by the Court in Padilla were challenges to removal/deportation 36 orders and not to present physical confinement. See Armentero v. INS, 412 F.3d 1088, 1099 37 (9th Cir. 2005) (Berzon, J., dissenting).

1 purposes of this motion that the respondents are the Attorney General and the Secretary of 2 D.H.S. and argues, as discussed below, that venue is still improper here under both the 3 “district of confinement” rule and traditional venue considerations.³

5 A. Application of the “district of confinement” rule

6 28 U.S.C. section 2241(a) empowers district courts to grant writs of habeas corpus 7 “within their respective jurisdictions.”⁴ This language reinforces the “general rule that for 8 core habeas petitions challenging present physical confinement, jurisdiction lies in only one 9 district: the district of confinement.” Padilla, 542 U.S. at 443; cf. Braden, 410 U.S. at 494, 10 499 (rejecting notion that habeas petitions must be brought in the district of confinement but 11 acknowledging that “in many instances the district in which petitioners are held will be the 12 most convenient forum for the litigation of their claims”). This “district of confinement” rule 13 weighs against finding that venue is proper here. See, e.g., Tenrreiro v. Ashcroft, 2004 U.S.
14 Dist. LEXIS 14005, at *3-4 (D. Or. July 12, 2004) (holding, post-Padilla, that the district 15 court lacked habeas jurisdiction because an alien challenging his detention must file in the 16 place of his confinement). Petitioner is being held at E.D.F. in Eloy, Arizona, where the 17

19 ³While a court normally considers personal jurisdiction in advance of venue, “both are 20 personal privileges of the defendant, rather than absolute strictures on the court, and both 21 may be waived by the parties.” Leroy v. Great Western Union Corp., 443 U.S. 173, 180 22 (1979). Because they are not primary in the sense of subject matter jurisdiction, “when 23 there is a sound prudential justification for doing so, . . . a court may reverse the normal order of considering personal jurisdiction and venue.” Id. This is such a case where prudential considerations point to deciding venue first, particularly since the respondent issue is in a state of flux and Respondents have only raised venue as a grounds for dismissal.

25 ⁴While it is unclear exactly what “jurisdiction” means and the term “is capable of different interpretations,” the Supreme Court has used “it in the sense that is used in the habeas statute, 28 U.S.C. § 2241(a), and not in the sense of subject-matter jurisdiction of the District Court.” Padilla, 542 U.S. at 434 n.7. This does not necessarily answer what “jurisdiction” means, since it is unclear what “jurisdiction” refers to in the context of the habeas statute. But, what is clear is that it is “not jurisdictional in the sense of a limitation on subject-matter jurisdiction.” Id. at 451 (Kennedy, J., concurring). Rather, “the phrase ‘respective jurisdictions’ . . . establish[es] a territorial restriction on the proper forum for habeas petitions” Id. at 452.

1 removal proceedings took place and where Petitioner has been detained since April 2004.
 2 Accordingly, under the “district of confinement” rule, venue lies in the District of Arizona.

4 B. Application of traditional venue considerations

5 Petitioner argues that traditional venue considerations apply because 28 U.S.C. section 6 2241 does not contain a specific venue provision.⁵ Assuming for purposes of discussion that 7 the “district of confinement” rule does not foreclose this argument, Respondents correctly 8 point out that traditional venue considerations still cut against this Court hearing the case.⁶
 9 As discussed above, traditional venue considerations include, but are not limited to, (1) 10 where “the material events took place,” (2) where the “records and witnesses pertinent to 11 petitioner’s claim are likely to be found,” and (3) whether the forum is convenient for the 12 parties. Braden, 420 U.S. at 493-94.

13 Here, these factors clearly weigh in favor of finding that venue properly lies in the 14 District of Arizona. First, the government has detained Petitioner at E.D.F. since April 2004, 15 and the removal proceedings and subsequent events took place in Eloy.⁷ Similarly, the 16 ⁵Petitioner misquotes from Braden in asserting that: “The Supreme Court has made 17 clear that court[s] should apply ‘traditional venue considerations in habeas proceedings 18 where venue is not fixed by statute.’” Opp’n at 1 (quoting Braden, 410 U.S. at 493). A 19 review of Braden reveals that the Supreme Court never made such a statement in the case, nor has it made such a statement in any other case.

20 ⁶It is unclear whether Padilla forecloses this argument because the language of 21 Padilla as to the “district of confinement” rule speaks in broad terms and does not appear to 22 distinguish between petitions brought by prisoners, enemy combatants, and aliens who challenge their present physical confinement. On the other hand, Padilla does not explicitly overrule the principle that traditional venue considerations apply to habeas petitions, set forth in Braden, 410 U.S. at 493, 500.

23 ⁷At oral argument, Petitioner’s lawyer asserted that the material events took place in 24 this district because the “I-862 charging document” issued from San Jose, California, and 25 that this was the only decision made as to Petitioner’s detention. A review of this document 26 reveals that this is Petitioner’s “notice to appear” for removal proceedings. See Ex. N to Pet.
 27 (explaining the grounds for removal from the U.S. and ordering Petitioner to appear before 28 an immigration judge at a location to be determined and showing that the document was received by the Department of Justice on April 23, 2004, in Eloy, Arizona). While it is true that the charging document issued from California, all that this document does is set in motion the removal proceedings. As discussed above, all of the material events surrounding the detention took place in Arizona, not California. Moreover, other exhibits attached to the petition for writ of habeas corpus show that the material events surrounding the detention

United States District Court
For the Northern District of California

1 administrative files likely are located in Arizona. As Respondents point out, “any witnesses 2 and records regarding his detention are located in Arizona, not California.” Reply at 2:14-15.
3 As to the parties’ convenience, Petitioner’s lawyer, Martin Resendez Guajardo (“Guajardo”), 4 argues that “Petitioner would be severely disadvantaged by having to bring a habeas 5 proceeding in Arizona since his counsel maintains an office in San Francisco, California and 6 has expended extensive efforts on this matter in the Northern District.” Opp’n at 2. Yet, 7 Guajardo does not explain what efforts have been expended here other than filing this 8 petition.

9 Further, Petitioner’s argument is undercut by the fact that Guajardo appeared before 10 the I.J. in Eloy, Arizona, for the removal proceedings. See Ex. K to Pet. at 7:11-13 11 (transcript of removal hearing held on July 22, 2004, showing that Guajardo is “in court 12 representing” Petitioner). This indicates that Guajardo is capable of traveling to Arizona.
13 Petitioner also had local counsel (which presumably he still can employ) in Arizona who 14 represented him at the removal proceedings. See id. (showing that local counsel is “in court 15 representing” Petitioner); Ex. L to Pet. at 3:5-7 (transcript of removal hearing held on May 16 18, 2004, showing that local counsel is Petitioner’s “attorney of record”). In fact, Petitioner 17 sought a change of venue (presumably to the Northern District) during the removal 18 proceedings, but the I.J. denied the motion because Petitioner had local counsel. See Ex. K 19 to Pet. at 14:4-20 (transcript of removal hearing held on July 22, 2004, finding that Petitioner 20 had local counsel who “is in the Phoenix area, an hour’s drive away and was on the case” and 21 that it was Petitioner’s “decision to get co-counsel” and that local counsel had “appeared on 24 occurred in Arizona. See Ex. D to Pet. (letter from D.H.S. issued from Phoenix, Arizona, 25 dated May 24, 2005, to Petitioner at E.D.F., entitled “Decision to Continue Detention Following File Review” and explaining D.H.S.’s reasons for denying a release under an 26 order of supervision because Petitioner had failed to demonstrate that he “would not pose a flight risk or be a threat to society”); Ex. E to Pet. (letter from Petitioner’s lawyer, dated Oct.

27 26, 2005, to Officer Lambert-Ray in Eloy, Arizona, seeking Petitioner’s release); Ex. G to Pet. (letter from Petitioner’s lawyer, dated June 23, 2005, to Officer Lambert-Ray in Eloy, Arizona, seeking Petitioner’s release); Ex. H to Pet. (letter from Petitioner’s lawyer, dated 28 May 16, 2005, to Officer Lambert-Ray in Eloy, Arizona seeking Petitioner’s release).

1 the case numerous times, and was the one that prepared the documents and the supporting 2 documents to submit to the Court").⁸

3 Petitioner mistakenly focuses on the location of the events underlying the removal 4 order. See Opp'n at 2 (stating that "the crime for which he became deportable took place in 5 the Northern District" and that "[t]he witnesses and evidence necessary to adjudicate his 6 request for a waiver . . . are all located in Northern California"). While it is true that the 7 actions giving rise to the removal proceedings occurred in this district, Petitioner is not 8 challenging his removal in this petition, but rather his detention. As noted above, all of the 9 actions surrounding his detention took place in Arizona. Other than the "I-862 charging 10 document," discussed supra n. 7, Guajardo is unable to point to any evidence regarding his 11 detention that supports hearing the petition in this district. Accordingly, based on traditional 12 venue considerations, the District of Arizona is the proper venue to hear this petition.

14 C. Transfer rather than dismissal

15 Although this petition was filed in the wrong district, the Court can either dismiss the 16 case or transfer it to a district in which the case could have been brought. Specifically, 28 17 U.S.C. section 1406(a) provides that "[t]he district court of a district in which is filed a case 18 laying venue in the wrong . . . district shall dismiss, or if it be in the interest of justice, 19 transfer such case to any district . . . in which it could have been brought." 28 U.S.C. § 20 1406(a).

21 Here, the case could have been originally filed in the District of Arizona and neither 22 party opposes this Court's transfer of the case to the District of Arizona.⁹ Further, "transfer

23 ⁸Petitioner also asserts that he would be prejudiced by litigating in Arizona because he 24 "likely would be required to retain new or local counsel in Arizona, since his counsel has no 25 office in Arizona and could not practicably provide adequate representation" in Arizona.
Opp'n at 2. Yet, this is also undercut by Petitioner's past retention of local counsel and Guajardo's appearance before the I.J. in Arizona.

26 ⁹Petitioner acknowledged at oral argument that this Court could transfer the petition to 27 the District of Arizona, but argued that in the interest of preserving judicial resources this 28 Court should retain jurisdiction. Because the Court finds that transfer is the appropriate course of action, it rejects Petitioner's argument that this Court should retain the case.

United States District Court

1 will be in the interest of justice because normally dismissal of an action that could be brought 2 elsewhere is ‘time-consuming and justice-defeating.’” Miller v. Hambrick, 905 F.2d 259, 262 3 (9th Cir. 1990) (quoting Goldlawr, Inc. v. Heiman, 369 U.S. 463, 467 (1962) (discussing 4 transfer under 28 U.S.C. § 1631, which has the same interest of justice requirement as 28 5 U.S.C. § 1406(a)). It is in the interest of justice to transfer this case to the District of 6 Arizona, rather than dismiss it because “‘dismissal of the action would only cause [petitioner] 7 to incur the additional expense of filing the same habeas corpus petition’ in [the] proper 8 district.” Tenrreiro, 2004 U.S. Dist LEXIS 14005, at *5 (quoting Roman v. Ashcroft, 340 9 F.3d 314, 328-29 (6th Cir. 2003)).

10 The Court also notes that ordering the transfer of the petition to the District of Arizona 11 is appropriate under 28 U.S.C. section 1631. In pertinent part, 28 U.S.C. section 1631 states:

12 Whenever a civil action is filed . . . and th[e] court finds that there is a want of 13 jurisdiction, the court shall, if it is in the interest of justice, transfer such action 14 . . . to any other such court in which the action . . . could have been brought at 15 the time it was filed or noticed, and the action or appeal shall proceed as if it had been filed in or noticed for the court to which it is transferred on the date upon which it was actually filed or noticed for the court from which it was transferred.

16 28 U.S.C. § 1631. While it is unclear if “jurisdiction” as used in section 1631 refers only to 17 subject matter jurisdiction or more broadly to personal jurisdiction and venue, the Court 18 notes that at least one district court in the Ninth Circuit has used “jurisdiction” in the broader 19 sense. See Tenrreiro, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14005, at *4-5 (finding transfer appropriate 20 under 28 U.S.C. section 1631 because “a court may transfer to cure lack of jurisdiction to any 21 court in which the action could have been brought” and referring to “habeas jurisdiction”).
22 Thus, applying this logic, the Court finds that, for the reasons articulated for transfer under 23 28 U.S.C. section 1406(a), transfer to the District of Arizona is in the interest of justice.
24

25 IV. CONCLUSION

26 The “district of confinement” rule states that for core habeas petitions challenging 27 present physical confinement (i.e. detention), the appropriate district is the district of 28

1 confinement, which in this case is the District of Arizona. Even accepting Petitioner's 2 argument that this case is governed by traditional venue considerations, Petitioner's 3 argument fails. As discussed above, traditional venue considerations demonstrate that venue 4 is proper in the District of Arizona, rather than in the Northern District of California.

5 The Court, however, has the discretion to transfer the petition rather than dismiss it.
6 Accordingly, this Court construes Respondents' motion to dismiss as a motion to dismiss or 7 transfer and ORDERS the transfer of this case to the District of Arizona under 28 U.S.C.
8 sections 1406(a) and 1631. The Clerk shall close the file and transfer the petition to the 9 District of Arizona.
